6. Content and structure

The programme consists of seven courses covering different aspects of Child Culture Design. The last course is an independent degree project of 30 credits, where students carry out their own design project in a chosen context or in collaboration with an external partner. The third semester includes a programme course (Children and Society) consisting of several sub-courses with different themes. In this course, students practise formulating and investigating relevant design questions using artistic methods. During three semesters, students also participate in a series of seminars and lectures that are integrated into the programme courses. The seminar and lecture series contains knowledge drawn from different scientific and artistic fields with a specific focus on children and children's culture.

The programme begins with a practical and theoretical introduction to Child Culture Design, where the student gains basic knowledge and understanding of the field. Students also begin to build a theoretical platform and frame of reference for their work. Students then learn methods for involving and collaborating with users and develop their knowledge of play and child development. Students also encounter other disciplines and professional competences that help to broaden their perspective and critical thinking. Students practise using multidisciplinary knowledge in their design projects. In addition, the student gains insight into the various actors and institutions in society that have a child perspective or that target children, through lectures, study visits and collaborative projects.

The Master's programme in Child Culture Design gives students the opportunity to relate to multidisciplinary knowledge and practice academic writing. The programme is linked to current research and development work in the field.

Design Studies

Within the programme, Design Studies are presented as an inter- and multidisciplinary field of knowledge which examines both internal design processes and the influence of design on various aspects of life. The field is connected to the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, and aims to bring together a wide range of methods and discourses.
